

About the Journal

Editorial policy: Macrolinguistics (ISSN 1934-5755, e-ISSN 2473-6376) is an international academic journal which is specialized in research papers of non-Indo-European linguistics. It aims at contributing to the complementarity and interaction of linguistic research worldwide. The journal mainly publishes papers in the following areas:

- (1) Original and pioneering theoretical research by scholars of non-Indo-European languages in linguistics and applied linguistics, mainly original theory based on the facts of non-Indo-European languages. e.g. (a) Systematic Operational Grammar research and other systematic operational linguistic research (Systematic operational linguistics based on complex system theory is the main feature of the journal, where research papers of systematic operational grammar, systematic etymology, systematic rhetoric, second language teaching research based on systematic operational theory will be published as priority); (b) language typology and anthropological linguistics (based on non-Indo-European languages, highlighting generality and peculiarity of languages and cultural anthropological interpretation of language issues).
- (2) Studies, descriptions and analyses of the rich resources of non-Indo-European languages (both living language materials and time-honored old language materials). e.g. (a) Synchronic linguistics (synchronic study of vocabulary, semantics, syntax, pragmatics within the system architecture of non-Indo-European languages); (b) Study in change of languages (mainly discusses the history of the formation and mechanism of modern non-Indo-European language systems, geographic variation, social and stylistic variation mechanism, mechanism of language change caused by contact with other Indo-European languages. We welcome instructive laws found in the corresponding fields);
- (3) Trends in the linguistic study of non-Indo-European languages;
- (4) Summary and assessment of the linguistic interpretations from massive research into the traditional philological studies of the non-Indo-European languages that can be introduced into the study of other languages, as well as the theoretical advancement on this basis;
- (5) Reviews, comments and discussions by scholars of Indo-European languages of the papers in this journal or comparative studies on the basis of papers in this journal;
- (6) Interactive studies by scholars of different non-Indo-European languages.
